

Couple of random ideas that are meaningless on their own but don't want to waste them

1 an object so heavy it needed to be kept on a giant pyramid to spread out the force of the weight pushing down

2 a room where pain can literally make you stronger so it doesn't matter how you feel pain you'll feel less of it when you get stronger so two people one who was mentally scarred and one who constantly felt pain because of a part of his brain malfunctioning

One would become physically overpowered but way too used to getting stronger by hurting himself so in battle when he would be on the back foot he'd start beating himself up, he would be very stressed in battle and hated himself for not getting used to the rules of physics in the world outside the room he lived in for most of his life, being very emotional at times and getting angry very easily

And another would be the opposite but hate himself for not putting the work because he was hoping that he would deal with his insecurities, he would get smarter by doing something and learn to calm himself down by learning how to do it they would combine into one person so that the other's rage and stress could be balanced out with the mental strength of the other person they had very small computer chips attached to every part of their body including every muscle, bone and nerve so that they could stay combined and have their minds and body linked completely over time after many battles most of the chips would be broken leaving a way weaker person both in mind and strength but even then they would be a freaking powerhouse... if they didn't glitch out and paused at random times trying to pull their bodies together so that they won't split apart

They've been linked for so long they're afraid of becoming themselves again

3 people using their fingers and hands to covey emotion (kind of like oswaldo guayasamín age of anger paintings)

4... I've got nothing